Disputes on recovery of additional child expenses on provision of permanent residency housing: issues of proof
Keywords: Child; housing; child expenses; alimony obligations; subject of proof; legal proceedings
The article states that disputes on recovery of additional child expenses on provision of permanent residency housing are unusual for the practice of general jurisdiction courts. Due to this fact, as the author assumes, citizens and their representatives often lack understanding of the appropriate proofs for their position. In this paper, the author provides their own approach to the subject of proof in such disputes.

Common (collective) obligations within the system of joint obligations
Keywords: Common obligations; collective obligations; general obligations; joint creditors; joint debtors; indivisibility of performance; indivisible obligations
In this paper, the author criticises classification of common obligations as the third type of joint obligations, which is widespread in contemporary Russian doctrine. The author justifies such obligations as being of a share obligation nature and proposes recommendations on their legal regime construction.

Will-substituting judiciary acts in corporate law-related disputes
Keywords: Substitution of will; abuse of right; obligation to do no harm; preferred shares; agreement on voting
The author analyses the concept of will-substituting (converting) judiciary acts and their application in Russian law, including the practice of courts substituting will in different cases of considering the corporate disputes. The article justifies that will-substituting shall be recognized as admissible if inequitable conduct of a legal entity's participant takes place. In view of the legal position of the Constitutional Court of the Russian Federation, the author suggests applying the concept of will-substituting for defending the rights of preferred shareholders.

Consequences of anti-suit injunction: theory and practice
Keywords: Anti-suit injunction; suspension of proceedings; dismissal without prejudice; withdrawal of a claim; limitation period; competition of jurisdictions
The author analyses the consequences of anti-suit injunction in two typical cases of regulatory competition: either an anti-suit injunction is sought in a foreign court in relation to a proceeding in a Russian court, or vice versa. The author concludes that the anti-suit injunction being issued escalates competition of jurisdictions instead of defusing it.

Regulation of digital platforms: international experience
Keywords: Digital platform; digital economy; marketplace; international legal regulation; national legislation; protection of the rights' holders; UNESCO
The article states that innovations and technological progress, despite being cutting-edge, do not break new ground in civil law. As the author considers, they just highlight the areas of legal regulation in need of enhancement and improvement, and one of these areas is platforming. The author discusses whether regulation in the sphere requires just national legal consensus, or whether international legal regulation is also necessary. The author also discusses if the multilateral convention similar to 1886 Bern Convention or 1883 Paris Convention may be signed.

Compensatory nature phenomenon in legal qualification of trade agreements: theory and practice
Keywords: Trade action; trade agreement; compensatory nature; equivalent; proprietary interest
The article highlights that compensatory nature is considered as an ultimate feature of a trade agreement. At the same time, as the author states, this construction is simultaneously not given sufficient attention in legal works of the last century. The author underlines that commutative contract definition (clause 1 of article 423 of the Russian Civil Code) does not allow to reveal the content of the commutative contract relations concept, because neither "payment" nor other kind of "consideration" are conceptually clarified. The author makes an attempt to justify compensatory nature as a feature of a trade agreement, as well as to define commutative relations.
